

Spot On: Anokha Skin Care

After establishing a successful career as a board certified plastic surgeon and professor at Cornell University, Dr. Nina S. Naidu combined her scientific and South Asian backgrounds to launch Anokha Skin Care in 2008. "Anokha" means "unique" in Urdu, which perfectly captures her line of cleansers, serums and masks. Naidu's products revolve around known healing properties of familiar South Asian botanicals and ingredients like neem, turmeric and gotu kola. And the formulations seem to transcend their humble origins. Milk and oatmeal turn into a delicate, yet effective cleanser that fights excess oil, while neem, turmeric and tulsī turn into powerful pore cleansers. It all adds up to an addictive skin care experience that's less regimen than indulgence.

High-Tech Beauty

You may soon be powering up your computer for a manicure instead of driving over to your favorite nail salon. Since Mattel introduced its Barbie digital nail printer at the 2009 Consumer Electronics Show, several others have come on the market. Just hook it up to your computer, choose a design (or take a photo), then stick your hand in the printer and press "Print." The catch? These printers go for recession-unfriendly price tags of thousands of dollars. But you can snag a Barbie Doll'd Up Nails digital nail printer for a mere $499 on Amazon.

Serious Scents

Summer is shaping up to be a hot one. Find a scent that stands up to the heat.

1. Limited Edition Stella McCartney solid perfume necklace — a wilting rose gets sexed up with amber.
2. Benefit Crescent Row The Second Story Lookin' to Rock Rita — eclectic citrus, floral and coconut with sandalwood and Brazilian rosewood.
3. Kimora Lee Simmons Baby Phat Dare Me — a beachy coconut and sandalwood.
4. Estée Lauder Limited Edition Bronze Goddess Solid Perfume Pendant — bergamot and mandarin meet amber, sandalwood and vetiver.
5. Bond No. 9 Andy Warhol Montauk — the artist's iconic Montauk sunset paintings with an androgynous scent of blueberry, wild bergamot, rich florals and silver maple.

Beauty Radar

M.A.C.'s latest limited edition collaboration with Alice + Olivia designer Stacey Bendet Eisner features color-saturated pigments and hints of shimmer, embodying the energy of youth and — let's face it — summer partying. Meanwhile, Shu Uemura's Gem Glam collection makes me want to throw a glamorous '80s pool party, with its line of just-plain-pretty colors inspired by the reflection of precious gemstones. Details M.A.C. Alice + Olivia available July through August. Shu Uemura Gem Glam available now.